

The Spiderweb- A Writing Metaphor

By: Addie Roling

Attributes:

Capture prey

Made of silk

Sticky

Spiders

Tension

Threads

Designs

Strength

Connects

Elasticity

Beautiful

The Writing Process is...

Addie Roling, English I - March 31, 2015

Attributes nouns, verbs
adj., adverbs

Capture prey
Made of silk Sticky
spiders
tension
threads
designs
strength connects elasticity
beautiful

The Spiderweb

The writing process is like...

I don't meditate on spider webs much, nor do I sit and contemplate my writing process but they are similar. Just as the spider begins to form the shape of the web my brain begins to plan an outline of my writing. Step by step, I come up with new ideas that become new threads in my writing. I then create complete thoughts that are like the silk connecting all the small important pieces together. I then fill my writing with details that add an extra flate of beauty, connecting everything further which creates the beautiful masterpiece. Each thread of information adds a new layer to my writing. All of my ideas connect to form an organized essay. Sometimes though my ideas get sticky and end up tangling my brain, causing the whole writing to crumble. ~~How~~ However, some capture the reader like prey and get them hooked into the writing. What started out as jumbled up ideas connects to form a complex, beautiful masterpiece of writing. Thus, my writing process is finished - until another web comes unwaveled, uncovering more ideas. ~~How~~

The Writing Process is...

I don't meditate on spiderwebs much, nor do I sit and contemplate my writing process but they are similar. Just as the spider begins to form the shape of the web my brain begins to plan an outline of my writing. Step-by-step, I come up with new ideas that become new threads in my writing. I then create complete thoughts that are like silk connecting all the small, important pieces together. I then fill my writing with details that add an extra flare of beauty, connecting ideas further which creates the beautiful masterpiece. Each thread of information adds a new layer to my writing. All of my ideas connect to form an organized essay. Sometimes though, my ideas get sticky and end up tangling my brain, causing the whole writing to crumble. However, some capture the reader like prey and get them hooked into the writing. What started out as jumbled up ideas connects to form a complex, beautiful masterpiece of writing. Thus, my writing process is finished- until another web comes unraveled, uncovering more ideas.